Changing of the Guard

With effect from the next issue of this Review Dr Mads Andenas, of King's College, London will become Editor, and Professor Barry Rider of the Institute of Advanced Legal Studies will become Consulting Editor. We wish them well in their endeavours, which we shall follow with interest. We have very much enjoyed establishing the Review, and we are grateful to our many friends on the Editorial Advisory Board for their encouragement and support over the last 7 years.

The Review has in the past sought to offer a balanced diet of critical insights, discussion and information, together with an overview of current developments, a range of book reviews and reports. Given that the field of what may be called business law embraces so many areas of Community activity, not to mention so many areas of national law, the diet has necessarily had some areas of concentration, and perhaps others where it has been more lean. Maintaining the necessary balance between protein, fats and vitamins has on occasions been a fairly sublime exercise.

We would also like to thank the many authors who have written for the Review in the last 7 years. We have been very happy to have had the opportunity of publishing work by many distinguished people, as well as work by those who are in the process of making their names, many of whom will no doubt feature among the great and the good of legal practice or academic life in the future.

Laurence Gormley also wishes to express his gratitude to Susan Nicholas for her dedication and his admiration for her extensive expertise. Readers will be glad to know that the elder sister of this Review, the Business Law Review, will continue in her capable hands. Susan Nicholas, in turn, is extremely grateful to Laurence Gormley for his constant support and advice without which she would not have been able to produce the Review over the past 7 years.

Alastair Graham, who led Graham & Trotman, now part of Kluwer Law International, at the time this Review was established, was always sterling in his support of our work, and it is fitting to acknowledge that support on this occasion. Last, but certainly not least, we would like to thank the subscribers to this Review, and the vastly greater number of its readers, for their support.
