

Editor's Note

This issue of the Journal of International Arbitration reproduces selected papers from the Second Biennial Conference on International Arbitration and Alternative Dispute Resolution, organized in Salzburg from 20–23 June 2002, by the Center for International Legal Studies.

The Conference devoted particular attention to various aspects of arbitration procedure, and the articles presented here take a practical approach to matters of concern to arbitrators, counsel and parties involved in dispute resolution. Space limitations have prevented us from including in one issue all of the excellent contributions to the Salzburg Conference; some of these will appear in future issues.

The editorial staff would like to thank the director of the Center for International Legal Studies, Dennis Campbell, for coordinating with the Conference panelists and participants to make these articles available to the Journal.
